

The grandmother had died while on holiday abroad with the family. To avoid expenses and formalities, the family decided to roll her up in a carpet, put it on the roof-rack and bring her back over the border.

During a short stop on the way home, thieves stole the carpet – along with the grandmother.

A woman stabbed her husband to death just as another murder was taking place on the screen of the drive-in cinema.

The musician was part of an act with a tightrope walker.

The musician normally played until the tightrope walker had safely reached the platform – only this time something in the audience distracted the musician and he stopped playing a moment too soon.

The elderly gentleman had travelled to B for an eye operation. He was blind. On the return journey to A, he removed the bandages from his eyes just as the train was going through a tunnel.

Totally shocked that he was still unable to see despite the doctor's promises, he jumped out of the train.
